Current Research Interests

- English and literacies education
- Arts education and
- Internationalisation

I have broad and distinguished expertise and experience in each of these areas spanning 30 years. I am recognised as a world expert in literacy and the arts as well as a literacy educator bridging research and practice in the classroom.

I regularly work with teachers in culturally and linguistically diverse schools with the aim of improving literacy learning outcomes. I use creative and reflective approaches to learning and teaching including arts-based research.

Current research projects include:

- The arts and literacy – multimodal text composition and comprehension

- The teaching of writing for culturally and linguistically diverse students
- English conversational classes in Community Hubs with migrant women and families
- Multimodalities and the importance of sound and music in multimodal texts
- Arts-based and creative and reflective approaches to improving literacy learning outcomes
- Teaching and assessing reflection in higher education
- Internationalisation and work placement e.g. <http://wisp-project.weebly.com/>

Methodological approaches that I utilise include: arts-based research methods, ethnography, spatial theory, systemic functional semiotics, reflective and reflexive theories and practices, and narrative.
